Section 1: Introduction – Honour in our Schools

The Importance of Honour for Success

It is important for us to honour our words and commitments to others. We should remain truthful to ourselves and to our promises.

Example 1:

- Keeping true to your word builds your reputation as reliable and trustworthy. This way, your word is your bond. During periods where you are in need of help from your colleagues, they will be more than willing to offer their help because they believe they can trust you. This will further build an excellent working relationship with your peers that can even come in handy after school.

- Trust is an essential component of Ghana's values and the cooperate world in general. Most of our dealings as human beings are based on trust. Our parents trust us that we will work hard in school that is why they pay our school fees. Our teachers trust that we will apply what we are taught to help society that is why they spend hours with us in the classrooms. Banks trust that lenders will pay back loans that is why they give them out.

Example 2:

- Honour builds teamwork due to the trust among members. If a group work is assigned, members in the group will likely give out their best if they know that their colleagues are equally going to give out their best. This helps to increase productivity.

Defining Honour & Honouring

Honour Ghana set out to interview a cross section of the Ghanaian youth to find out their opinions on Honour and Honouring. What did we find?

The responses we received are summarized below;

What is Honour?

- Knowing and doing what is morally right and adhering to ethical principles, moral values and social norms.
- Respect, sincerity and trustworthiness towards others.
- Recognizing and giving credit to those who have done great work.
- Obeying the rules and regulations that govern a place.
- Being appreciative to others.

Honour & Honouring in our Schools

We come from diverse backgrounds to meet in our various schools. The diversity comes with different cultural values and beliefs. However, most of our values have an underlying backbone of 'Honour'.

On this journey with Honour Ghana, together we will bolster these values we have and further inculcate the culture of Honour as defined by the Ghanaian youth. For us who feel we may not have begun the journey of Honour at all; Relax! this toolkit is for you too.

Most schools have their own sets of values outlined in the code of conduct. The toolkit will seek to exploit these regulations and make them for practical and acceptable to the student.

Section 2: Honour Capability Framework for organizations

The Framework Explained

Honour is an input, a process, and an outcome. One cannot receive Honour without first offering Honour through honourable intentions and actions. It is through this framework that we can achieve the success we intend for.

Using the Framework for your Organization

Honour begins with us as individuals. We should be able to identify the values we possess which are acceptable to the society so that we can build on them. On the other hand, we should endeavour to identify our behaviours which are not acceptable so that we work on eschewing them. This will empower us to be the best we can be.

As students, we cannot succeed without respecting our parents and teachers and obeying the school rules and regulations. By doing this, we honour those around us.

Section 3: Culture Building

Whole-Operational Approach

It will take a collective effort to ensure that the culture of honour is built and sustained.

Options for Engagement

The following are some of the ways by which the culture of Honour can be made a collective effort in our schools.

- General Assembly Sessions
- Honour Champions Community Meetings
- Honour Media/Film Initiative Sessions
- Alignment Sessions during Honour Champions Community Meetings
